

Lemer Pax opens an office in Japan

The objective of this Lemer Pax move is to be as close as possible to customers, to better grasp their needs and to respond to them faster. France and Japan have developed two different corporate cultures. This is why it is necessary for us to get to know one another. Luckily, there are main convergences, says Pierre-Marie Lemer (CEO Lemer Pax). Long-termism respect of the engagements and high standard quality are common values shared by both France and Japan.

Lemer Pax, whose first visits to Japan date back to the mid-1970s, has a good understanding of how business works in this country.

Lemer Pax, partner of the CEA since it was founded, designs and produces radiation protection equipment ranges designed for the medical world, research, industry and nuclear protection.
